

The Difficult Part of Thinking

The most difficult part of thinking is love, sincerity, and responsibility. But when put to practice, it brings out the beauties of life.

This is because people grasp life's fabric, scent, and its visible and invisible dimensions through the spirit of these three things -love, sincerity, responsibility. They taste life through this spirit. They find meaning in life as long as they can preserve this spirit. They find the meaning of life. They enlighten the blind.

If we are the sticks of the vine, we have to serve our sphere by remaining in the vine and with the power of love, not the love of power. We have to carry out our responsibilities. Our sterility must transform into productivity.

Lest we forget, “trees bear fruit as long as they remain alive. Humans remain alive as long they bear fruit.”

In that case, we must give healthy fruit to people and to our communities for our own life energy and peace of mind. We must be capable of giving...!

We must not get bored or sick of giving. We must give without sinking into a spirit of arrogance, pride, and supremacy....!

We must know that to love and to act, we need heart; to enhance and sustain, we must work.
